

Congratulations! You got your fake medicines

A satirical approach on counterfeit medicines

Somewhere in the town there is a big hospital. Bigger and luxurious that people often gets into it mistaking it for a five star hotel. one of the most premium restaurants in town runs the canteen of it. It's a common say there that people might go there for seeing their relative who underwent a liver transplant only just to eat the tawa khaleji (goat liver stir fry). But the irony is that one would have to sell their own liver to pay the bills. Too much complexity.

Why are bills too high? Someone asked “ your health is our priority. Our pharmacies carry quality pharmaceuticals.. patients first that's our motto.”, the doctor said. He saw that behind the glass wall of the intensive care unit. Still he is left unanswered. Then why it never ends? Why am I supposed to bring my daughter every week here? Why is she never healing ?why the medicines are not working? Why? Why because maybe they aren't even medicines . It's all a play.

But they have shiny covers, fancy colours and a name that frightens people. The ingredients are written one by one. It looks all scientific . Everything curable . Everything real. Everything medicinal .But there is one thing missing. Only one single thing , The medicine that works. the medicine that should work. A fake medicine can imitate everything except one thing, to save a life.

How the substandard and falsified medicines are expected to work? They directly threaten patient lives. “Patient's first” , they say .Yes to die first.

What a wonderful health care system! They provide medicines that wont work, that don't cure.

Please don't stop making fake medicines. We need more pharmacies that sell medicines for unidentified diseases. We need more mansion like hospitals.

Life is easier now. One could buy medicines without even worrying if it actually works...
